

External Design Document

An external design document's objective is to convey how the system will seem to its users, how it will interact with existing work processes, how it will connect with other pieces of software, and what kind of work products the system will require/produce.

Our soccer page is a helpful guide meant to be utilized by the user to further analyze our team and learn about it. We've encompassed our website with 5 features:

- A project guide page, that helps users understand the purpose of each page. Also hosts the demo video and presentation video.
- An about page, which holds a list of all our players and a brief description of each
- An achievements page which consists of all the awards and achievements earned by our team
- A team analysis page that holds our CRUD operands.

The project guide page:

Acts as a secondary landing page, and a more formal welcome for the users. It greets the user with a paragraph explaining the features of the site and has a video attached alongside it. Videos will aid in attracting new website visitors and leaving an impact. They are concentrated on a single objective or call to action by giving details about a particular offer or item, and landing pages convert more visitors. Its simple design and minimal navigation prevent visitors from becoming sidetracked by numerous links that go off the page and away from their intended aim. A video on a website adds to the static content there, giving the user an engaging experience by supplementing it. Building enduring relationships with web visitors is easy with the help of videos.

The about page:

An about us page's main goal is to educate the reader about the business and its operations. This is a straightforward objective that almost all businesses must achieve in one way or another.

The achievements page:

Achievements push our team towards accomplishing their goals and also showcase our skills and abilities in a physical form. It certifies our abilities and acts as proof of our competency. Achievements are an important part of establishing credibility.

Team Analysis:

This page has our CRUD operands, which allow the user to add, edit or remove players.
